

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

The optical disk has the resin material layer provided between the metal layer of the first substrate and the thin layer of the material capable of transmitting light of a predetermined wavelength of the second substrate. The resin material layer has different properties imparted thereto between a location close to the opening and a location away from the opening.